THREE TO WRITE ABOUT

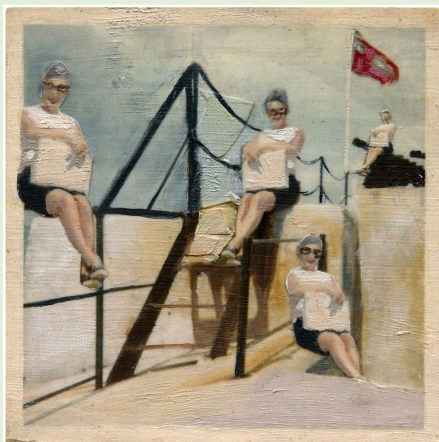

Chris
HUTCHESON

In capturing images of performing artists, Chris' images focus on immersion - that point when performers are completely absorbed in their performance - when it just flows. He's worked with a variety of performers at the Free Concert Series, the Canadian Opera Company's Four Seasons Centre, as well as burlesque performers both in Toronto and Montreal. For his landscape series, he focuses on images at rest - for a season, or at the end of their useful lives, when their presence is often a surprise; something happened on rather than looked for.

Caitlin
DOHERTY

In her series "Mementos of Never", what appears to be a collection of old photographs reveals itself upon closer inspection as something entirely different. Through repetition, collage and painting, Caitlin parodies the family photograph by simulating its likeness. Working with standard photo dimensions, she uses collage to subtly change the content of the original photo. Using techniques of transformation, exaggeration, satire, disguise and appropriation, she aims to create images that hold multiple meanings, provoke nostalgia and lead the viewer to associate through their own experiences.

Christopher
HAYES

Christopher's art pays homage to the historical art genre of Assemblage. It speaks to the way he deconstructs urban themes and reconstructs them in a pop art painting style. Using nostalgic childhood memories of familiar places and life experiences as a source of inspiration, Hayes juxtaposes these familiar scenes with made objects, contrasting the old and the new. The high gloss finish on the painted images preserves a moment in time - allowing Hayes to chronicle the evolution of the city and his memories of it.
